This conference will be a great learning opportunity for all interested in best practice for experiencing success with at risk youth. Dr. Anglin will raise questions and thoughts in people's minds about the framework and the dynamics of group care. Based on the results of a 14-month study of group homes in British Columbia, three major psychosocial processes will be introduced:

Creating an Extrafamilial
Learning Environment
Responding to Pain and
Pain Based Behavior
Developing a Sense of Normality

Dr. Anglin will discuss issues arising and implementation of these processes at the Group Home, Agency and Government levels.

Brief Biography

Jim Anglin began his career as a child and youth care worker in a mental health centre in Vancouver after which he moved to Victoria and began a 6-bed group home for four boys and two girls who were experiencing a variety of distresses in their lives. Following these front-line work experiences he pursued graduate studies and then spent two years in social policy work in Ottawa and two years as a Senior Project Coordinator with the Children's Services Division in Toronto. Returning to B.C. in 1979, he joined the faculty of the School of Child and Youth Care at the University of Victoria where he is a full Professor and former Director.

His recent research interests have focused on a re-appreciation of residential care for youth and his latest book is titled "Pain, Normality and the Struggle for Congruence: Reinterpreting Residential Care for Children and Youth" (Haworth, 2002). He has published in North American journals and international texts on a variety of child and youth care issues in addition to residential care, including professionalization, parent education and support, and international initiatives. He is on the editorial boards of the Child and Youth Care Forum, Child and Youth Services, and Reclaiming Youth at Risk. He was coordinating editor for the text Perspectives in Professional Child and Youth Care (Haworth, 1990). Over the past 20 years, he has presented papers, keynote addresses and workshops in over 40 countries.

Jim currently serves as Associate Vice-President Academic and Student Affairs at the University of Victoria.
